

During the work placement, learners put into practice what they have learned during their course.

A work placement experience, however, requires more from learners: dealing with customers whilst being able to face and handle the difficulties that might occur in real working life. In other words:

BEING PROFESSIONAL!

Therefore, by going abroad, learners will undergo a unique and rich experience:

A broader vision of their future job and professional sector together with contacts with other cultures and languages!

Transnational mobility not only promotes European labour market mobility, it also helps develop an awareness of "European citizenship" and fosters new international skills such as languages and intercultural competence and personal skills.
